Infrastructure Migration Program Management

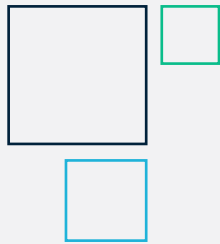

Problem

The world's largest construction equipment manufacturer needed help to develop and manage a detailed IT project plan working with various project managers from its network services, server storage, PC, telepresence, and applications divisions for their global information services division. The expectation from this program was not only to create a large-scale plan of developing, migrating, and consolidating the IT infrastructure in three of its India locations, but also to create new plans to move ahead with the precise risk analysis, prediction, and mitigation.

Solution

Aditi meticulously sourced and documented diverse IT initiatives essential for building and consolidating the encompassing network, storage functions, switches, hardwired connections, and racks. The Aditi team crafted a comprehensive IT asset move and procurement plan, incorporating backup strategies and other vital IT activities. Specifically, Aditi excelled in developing detailed tasks within each project plan, generating inventories for assets in each building, and strategically planning their location in the final building. Furthermore, Aditi conducted insightful risk analyses, offering timely reports as required, and adeptly managed team member activities to ensure the project remained on schedule and within budget constraints.

Result

Functioning as a general contractor, Aditi played a pivotal role in orchestrating the initial planning phases, establishing a solid foundation for the project's progression. This strategic approach allowed Aditi to seamlessly transition off the project, empowering the client company to independently complete the migration process.

The success of this collaborative effort was reflected in the company's complete satisfaction with the project outcome. Aditi's meticulous planning not only ensured a smooth handover but also laid the groundwork for the client to take charge of the final stages of migration, showcasing the effectiveness of the partnership and the transition to full autonomy within the business.
